NEW CLUES IN FATAL SHOOTING ARE UNEARTHED

Corporal Mollenkof And Detective Wilson Conduct 3-Day Investigation.

New clues in the fatal shooting of Melvin Orner, 25, Bendersville, last October, while engaged in raccoon hunting, have been unearthed by Corporal S. S. Mollenkof, of the state police, and Charles H. Wilson, county detective.

The nature of the clues would not be divulged by the officers this morning. They said, however, that new and hitherto unknown evidence in the mysterious shooting of Orner had been uncovered in a three-day investigation which closed Friday.

Although a coroner's jury, summoned some time after the fatality, which occurred October 17, found that Orner had come to accidental death, the verdict did not satisfy District Attorney John P. Butt or local authorities, who have since been working tirelessly on all the evidence at hand.

New Developments
Numerous clues were run down in vain by the authorities, so that the identity of the person in whose hands was the 38-40 rifle from which the ball was fired and which struck Orner and caused his death at the Warner Hospital October 21 has since remained in darkness.

Now, however, developments in the case indicate a turn toward a solution of the otherwise mysterious shooting, but whether the evidence indicates an accidental or an intentional affair the police would not indicate.

According to Corporal Mollenkof, several suspects are being watched, but he would not say when an arrest could be expected.

"The district attorney has been pressing us to ferret out the truth in this shooting," Corporal Mollenkof said this morning, "and we are now endeavoring to get to the bottom of the case. We have uncovered some likely evidence, and soon we may know who fired the shot which caused Orner's untimely death."

Was 'Coon Hunting

Orner, a young, married man, was 'coon hunting in Tyrone township, with John Miller, his father-in-law, and Ben Baldwin, both of Wexville, when he was shot through the arm and abdomen by a bullet from a 38-40 rifle. Orner died without giving a statement concerning the shooting. The stories told by Miller and Baldwin were that the three were seated on the ground when a shot was heard and that Orner said he was wounded. None of the trio had a rifle, it was said, the raccoon hunting being carried on with dogs. Orner was brought to the Warner Hospital here immediately after the affair, and died October 21.

The coroner's jury reached a verdict of accidental death, although there was no evidence submitted to show who wielded the rifle from which the fatal shot was fired.

Local Mason To Attend New York Lodge Celebration

William E. Voorhees, West Middle street, has gone to New York City to attend, as an invited guest, the centennial celebration of Naval Lodge, 69, Free and Accepted Masons. "Old Naval" and its guests will assemble at 256 Broadway and march under the escort of York Commandery, 55, to St. Paul's church. Moving pictures will be taken en route for historical purposes and for showing in lodge rooms.

St. Paul's church is one of the oldest in America. It is the one in which George Washington and George Clinton, the latter the first governor of New York state, worshipped. Both men were prominent Masons in their day. The pews they used in St. Paul's church are designated by flags. The grave of General Montgomery is directly beneath the altar.

A banquet at the Hotel Commodore will conclude the centennial celebration.

BURGLAR LOOTS CHICKEN COOP

Also Escapes With Four Automobile Tires, Battery, Tube and Set of Tools.

A chicken thief with a rather diversified taste for loot visited the home of Perren Rebert, Seven Stars, between midnight and morning today. In addition to 100 chickens, the robber stole four automobile tires, an automobile battery, one tube and a set of automobile tools.

State police were notified of the theft, and Corporal S. S. Mollenkof made a personal investigation of the robbery, after which he announced that several suspects will be kept under surveillance.

Rebert held sale at his farm Friday and it is believed that someone attending the auction was responsible for the robbery. Rebert had sale preparatory to moving to another farm near Seven Stars.

The thief or thieves took the four tires from one of three automobiles at the Rebert place, but did not molest either of the other two machines.

The chickens taken may be identified by brass rings around the right leg of each chicken, and produce dealers in this vicinity have been advised to be on the lookout for such chickens offered them for sale.

SEEK MILITARY FRATERNITY AT W. M. COLLEGE

Gettysburg College is the smallest institution of learning in the country to house a "Scabbard and Blade" fraternity. The standing for institution of a chapter is based on the standing of the military department with the college and with the War Department at Washington, making it extremely difficult to organize a chapter unless the cadet officers and students rank unusually high in their military training and their studies.

Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson, president of the college, is an honorary member of the local chapter as is General Ireland, Chief of the Medical service of the Army, who was elected some time ago, when he spoke here. Captain S. C. Thompson and Captain E. H. Malone are associate members.

Blinding Snowstorm Faced by President to Attend Funeral

(By Associated Press.)
Plymouth, Vt., March 20.—A snow storm swept over the Green Mountains of Vermont today as President Coolidge traveled over a treacherous road, part of the way in an open sleigh, from Woodstock to Plymouth, to attend the funeral of his father.

The snow, wet and almost blinding, fell incessantly after it had rained throughout the night. It added a soggy blanket to the heavy fall already on the ground and made the road next to impassable.

In the fact of the storm the President and Mrs. Coolidge accompanied by their son, John, started from Woodstock Inn, where they had spent the night, over the 16-mile winding road to the hamlet, four hours before the time set for the funeral. They expected to be on the way for two hours, more than half of the time exposed to the wind and stinging snow flakes.

Meanwhile, at Plymouth, last minute arrangements were being made for the funeral to be held in the Coolidge farm house. A hearse, mounted on runners and drawn by two black horses, had come over the road from Woodstock. Efforts were being made to bring through the storm floral tributes which had arrived at Ludlow, miles away from the mountains.

Phi Beta Kappas Enjoy Reunion

Forty members of the Phi Beta Kappa honorary fraternity at Gettysburg College, Dickinson and Franklin and Marshall attended the annual reunion of the three chapters, Friday evening at Harrisburg.

During the meeting which was preceded by a dinner, it was proposed to advance the date of the next gathering to next December, at the time of the celebration of the sesqui-centennial anniversary of the founding of the order. Further action will be taken by officers in the next several months.

Professor Patterson, of the economics department of the University of Pennsylvania, told the members last night of the economic results of the World War on America and the European nations. He substituted for Dr. Felix Schelling, of the same university, who was unable to attend, Dr. J. H. Morgan, president of Dickinson College, president.

Phi Beta Kappas from Gettysburg College who attended were Dr. Charles F. Sanders, Dr. G. D. Stahley, Dr. Edward Seht, Professor G. S. Worthen and Professor, Mason.

HELEN WINS AGAIN

(By Associated Press.)
Cannes, France, March 20.—Helen Wills reached the final of another tournament today by defeating Eileen Bennett, of England, 6-2 and 6-4.

A grave had been dug in the Hillside cemetery, a quarter of a mile away from Col. Coolidge's home, and a lane had been dug through for the funeral party. A detachment of the Vermont National Guard was on duty here, six of the militiamen having been designated to carry the body to its resting place.

Two o'clock was the hour set for the funeral.

The president planned to return to Woodstock late in the afternoon to board the special train for his return to Washington. The train has been held on a siding here since the president's arrival from the capital yesterday.

The first stage of the journey from Woodstock to the funeral was made in a closed automobile which afforded the president's family protection from the storm.

At Bridgewater Corners, six miles from here, a transfer was made to sleigh and from there on the president faced March weather at its worst.

Woodstock was combed for raincoats which were placed at the president's disposal and the three-seated sleighs, which were pressed into service were heaped high with robes.

8-YEAR-OLD BOY FRACTURES SKULL

Youth Drops Off Rear of Wagon in Path of Automobile; Driver Attempts to Avert Accident.

Fred Troxell, Jr., 8, son of Professor and Mrs. Fred Troxell, Hanover, formerly of Gettysburg, suffered a fractured skull in an accident which occurred shortly before noon, Friday, while the boy was returning from school. The lad's father is a brother of County Treasurer Harry J. Troxell, Baltimore street.

The boy dropped from the rear of a wagon on which, he had been hanging into the path of an automobile being driven by Arthur Parr, Littlestown, R. D. 2. In an attempt to avoid striking the boy, the driver sent his machine against the curb, damaging one of the wheels. The boy, whose face and body were considerably cut and bruised, was taken into a nearby store and his parents and a physician, Dr. M. M. Fleagle, summoned.

Dr. Fleagle after an examination advised the removal of the boy to a hospital. Accompanied by his parents and the physician he was taken in Mr. Troxell's automobile to the West Side sanitarium, West York, where it was revealed that his skull had been fractured in the accident.

Mrs. Troxell remained with her son, and Mr. Troxell after returning Dr. Fleagle to Hanover also returned to the hospital.

A short time ago a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Troxell, Betty, received minor injuries when struck by an automobile.

The boy was reported as resting comfortably Friday evening.

Simultaneous with the announcement that the college will dedicate its gymnasium to the memory of the late hurler as a permanent and lasting memorial, The Times' "Eddie Plank Memorial Committee" announced that the Philadelphia Athletics and the Phillies will play a benefit baseball game in September to help swell the memorial fund.

The announcement of the benefit game followed a conference between members of the Memorial Fund Committee and Connie Mack, Thomas S. Shibe, owner of Shibe Park, and William F. Voluntary Subscriptions

"The Executive Committee of Gettysburg College was in hearty accord with the proposal to dedicate the new gymnasium to the memory of Eddie Plank," said Dr. Hanson this morning. "Gettysburg College has always been proud of the fact that Eddie Plank began his baseball career on its diamond, especially in view of the clean sportsmanship which stood out as a beacon throughout his seventeen years as a major league hurler. He was over a hard worker, a square shooter and an inspiration to the collegian." Since announcement was made a week ago that the Gettysburg Times was sponsoring a movement to establish a memorial to Eddie Plank in Gettysburg through voluntary subscriptions, contributions have been received from various sections of the country.

A hearse, mounted on runners and drawn by two black horses, had come over the road from Woodstock. Efforts were being made to bring through the storm floral tributes which had arrived at Ludlow, miles away from the mountains.

Woodstock was combed for raincoats which were placed at the president's disposal and the three-seated sleighs which were pressed into service were heaped high with robes.

8-YEAR-OLD BOY FRACTURES SKULL

Youth Drops Off Rear of Wagon in Path of Automobile; Driver Attempts to Avert Accident.

Fred Troxell, Jr., 8, son of Professor and Mrs. Fred Troxell, Hanover, formerly of Gettysburg, suffered a fractured skull in an accident which occurred shortly before noon, Friday, while the boy was returning from school. The lad's father is a brother of County Treasurer Harry J. Troxell, Baltimore street.

The boy dropped from the rear of a wagon on which, he had been hanging into the path of an automobile being driven by Arthur Parr, Littlestown, R. D. 2. In an attempt to avoid striking the boy, the driver sent his machine against the curb, damaging one of the wheels. The boy, whose face and body were considerably cut and bruised, was taken into a nearby store and his parents and a physician, Dr. M. M. Fleagle, summoned.

Dr. Fleagle after an examination advised the removal of the boy to a hospital. Accompanied by his parents and the physician he was taken in Mr. Troxell's automobile to the West Side sanitarium, West York, where it was revealed that his skull had been fractured in the accident.

Mrs. Troxell remained with her son, and Mr. Troxell after returning Dr. Fleagle to Hanover also returned to the hospital.

A short time ago a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Troxell, Betty, received minor injuries when struck by an automobile.

The boy was reported as resting comfortably Friday evening.

College Will Dedicate Its New $125,000 Gymnasium to Memory of "Eddie" Plank

Athletics and Phillies Will Play Benefit Game Some Time in September; Active Campaign To Be Inaugurated For Memorial; Many Dignitaries on Honorary Committee.

Dr. Henry W. A. Hanson, president of Gettysburg College, this morning announced that the recommendation of the "Eddie Plank Memorial Fund Committee," sponsored by The Gettysburg Times, to dedicate the new $125,000 Gettysburg College gymnasium, to the memory of the veteran southpaw moundsman of the Philadelphia Athletics of a decade ago, was approved by the executive committee of the board of trustees of the college.

Simultaneous with the announcement that the college will dedicate its gymnasium to the memory of the late hurler as a permanent and lasting memorial, The Times' "Eddie Plank Memorial Committee" announced that the Philadelphia Athletics and the Phillies will play a benefit baseball game in September to help swell the memorial fund.

The announcement of the benefit game followed a conference between members of the Memorial Fund Committee and Connie Mack, Thomas S. Shibe, owner of Shibe Park, and William F. Baker, president of the Phillies, at Fort Myers, Florida, this week. The benefit game will probably be played September 27, in Shibe Park, Philadelphia.

LARGE CROWD AT P. T. MEETING

Speakers Present Interesting Talks; Musical Program Opens Regular March Session.

The Parent Teachers' Association of Gettysburg held its March meeting, Friday evening, in the auditorium of the high school, with a good attendance. Speakers were Miss Charlotte E. Carr, head of the women's and children's section of the state department of labor and industry, and Miss Elizabeth S. Rogers, New York, organizer of the local Y. W. C. A.

The meeting was opened with two selections by children of the Seventh grade. Other musical numbers were two vocal duets by Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Zinn, who sang "Oh, That We Two Were Maying" and "Smilin' Through."

Outlining the work of the department with which she is associated, Miss Carr told of the efforts being made to better working conditions of women and children throughout the state, enumerating the many physical disabilities accruing from poor buildings and surroundings in which women and children are often forced to work.

Need Cooperation
After detailing the means of educating employers, employees and the general public to better working conditions, Miss Carr emphasized the need of cooperation in towns and cities, in the enforcement of the labor laws in the home and street trades. She praised conditions for workers in Adams county.

Miss Rogers spoke of the work done by the Y. W. C. A. in foreign countries, adding that such work everywhere endeavored to meet the need of the individual community. In Gettysburg and Adams county, she said, it is planned that the Y. W. C. A. shall serve the greatest number of people.

In closing, Miss Rogers declared: "The uneducated woman is she who goes unseeing, unaccompanied and unhappy through life. The aim of the Y. W. C. A. is to give girls and women seeing, accompanied and happy."

Voluntary Subscriptions
"The Executive Committee of Gettysburg College was in hearty accord with the proposal to dedicate the new gymnasium to the memory of Eddie Plank," said Dr. Hanson this morning. "Gettysburg College has always been proud of the fact that Eddie Plank began his baseball career on its diamond, especially in view of the clean sportsmanship which stood out as a beacon throughout his seventeen years as a major league hurler. He was ever a hard worker, a square shooter and an inspiration to the collegian."

Since announcement was made a week ago that the Gettysburg Times was sponsoring a movement to establish a memorial to Eddie Plank in Gettysburg through voluntary subscriptions, contributions have been received from various sections of the country.

Acceptances for membership on the honorary committee have been received from a number of prominent baseball men throughout the country and the personnel will be announced within the next few weeks.

Active Campaign
The executive committee comprises Dr. Hanson, president of Gettysburg College, Herbert L. Grimm, George Hummel, chairman of the Gettysburg College Athletic Association, and Paul L. Roy.

An active campaign will be inaugurated in Gettysburg for the memorial, which is expected to be dedicated some time in the fall. Dr. Hanson said that elaborate dedicatory ceremonies would attend the opening of the new gymnasium and that many dignitaries of college and baseball life would attend and take part in the program.

Various organizations in Gettysburg have informed the Memorial Fund Committee that they would contribute to the memorial, while individuals have declared that they would send in private contributions.

"RED MILL" CHART IS OPENED TODAY

BERLENBACH IS BADLY BEATEN

Light Heavyweight Champ
Floored by Cleveland Who Scores Sensational Victory.

New York, Mar. 20.—Paul Berlenbach's quest for recognition as a heavyweight contender was abruptly checked Friday night when he was decisively whipped in a slashing round battle with Johnny Risko, of Cleveland, in the feature match at Madison Square Garden. The referee's decision was almost unnecessary to determine the result.

The world's light heavyweight king not only was battered from start to finish by his 22-year-old opponent, a comparatively newcomer to fistic ranks, but was close to a knockout in each of the first three rounds of one of the most sensational ring upsets of the season.

Berlenbach was floored for a count of four in the first round by a crashing left to the jaw, saved only by the bell as he careened to the canvas again in the second round under the impact of another pile driving left and groggy under a hall of punches in the third.

Surviving this unexpected and terrific storm, however, seemed to have a stimulating effect on Berlenbach, for he rallied and nearly held his own for the rest of the fight, staving off Risko's rushes and finishing with a spirited rally in the tenth round.

Berlenbach's gameness and stamina, however, were unequal to offsetting the superior power in Risko's punches and the tremendous weight advantage enjoyed by the Cleveland, who tipped 190 to the champion's 174½. Both tired under their terrific pace, but Risko was the stronger at the finish.

A crowd of 16,000 fans, whipped to a frenzied pitch of excitement, saw Risko pound his way to a sensational victory which stamped him as an outstanding heavyweight contender while it virtually blasted the hopes Berlenbach entertained of entering the heavier division. The young Cleveland displayed a granite jaw which absorbed Berlenbach's heaviest blows without damaging effect, as well as a terrific punch in either hand.

STOCK REPORT

New York, March 20.—Another sharp drive against motor shares featured today's irregular market. Prices showed a tendency to advance on short coverings in the early trading, but when business quieted down selling pressure was renewed against motors and some of the high priced industrial specialties. Strong support was provided for U. S. Steel common, Baldwin, and most of the oil and rail shares. The closing was irregular.

CHANGED MIND SAYS MARSHALL

Defendant in Murder Trial Admits He "Lost His Head" Accounting For Changing His Mind.

(By Associated Press) Philadelphia, March 20.—Still under severe cross-examination, David L. Marshall, on trial charged with the killing of Anna May Dietrich and dismembering her body, admitted today that he had changed his mind as to the cause of her death.

Marshall is charged by the Commonwealth with having choked the 35-year-old milliner because he said she threatened to tell his wife of their relations. He is alleged to have made a confession to this effect after he had made a prior statement that the woman died from poison.

Marshall replied affirmatively when asked whether he had concluded the cause of death was due to a mistake on the part of Miss Dietrich in using a deadly drug instead of a salt solution while she was in Marshall's office. "Then you changed your mind and decided it was suicide?" the district attorney asked.

Marshall appeared confused and finally said: "That is right."

"Why did you change your mind?" "When I found out what happened, I lost my head," the witness said.

LOWER INSURANCE RATES FORECAST

Engineers of Underwriting Companies Working Here; Items Charged Against Decreases.

In an effort to bring about lower insurance rates for owners of property in Gettysburg, insurance engineers are making a survey in which they are taking into consideration the large number of improvements made here since the last similar survey was made.

Since the town was last surveyed and rated the fire department has been motorized, all of the main streets paved, new water lines laid, shingle roofs prohibited, and a fire zone established within which no frame buildings may be erected.

Various points touched upon by the engineers indicate charges against these improvements for a number of deficiencies, one of which is the absence of any paid firemen, the increase in the size of the town since last rating, the fact that there is only one police officer on duty at night, and various other defects which enter into the rating of a town.

Water Supply Satisfactory Inspection of the town's water supply and pumping station, together with testing of the fire hydrants, resulted entirely satisfactorily, it is said.

Not only is the town being rated as a municipality but hundreds of individual properties have been inspected and will be subject to new ratings in the near future.

The engineers indicate that it will possibly be several months before their work is finished, as the field surveys must be followed by a vast amount of office computation made necessary by the present methods of scientific underwriting.

HIGH STARTS B. B. PRACTICE

Several Regulars Respond to Call; Captain "Jake" Weikert Hopes For Successful Season.

(By Don Bee)

Issuing forth to Coach Reynolds, call for baseball candidates approximately thirty-five aspirants for team positions appeared on the Playground field for the first workout of the season Friday night. Among the letter men who reported was "Jake" Weikert, who will do the receiving for the Maroon and White nine as well as pilot the machine. Jim Tennant and "Eddie" Utz, pitchers; John Myers, third base; Dale Bream, left field, and Wilmer Bream, center field, were the other men who reported for the first drill.

Many other players were on hand and there promises to be merry battles for the various positions this year. The biggest question will be the infield. With but one man back who plays the hot corner there remains three open berths. "Bud" Knox, sensational player for the Bullets last summer, is expected to fill one of these gaps with the other two very much in doubt. The pitching and catching for this year's nine will be of the best. Tennant and Utz, who pitched the undefeated nine of last years to victory, will comprise the backbone of the staff. Gibbs, of no-fit, no-run fame for York Springs, will make a strong bid for a position on the hurling corps.

Captain Jake Weikert is expected to fill the backstop position in his same skill, with Bill Jones as his understudy.

The outfield will remain intact, but for a right fielder. Dale Bream will be in left field again with "Screetchie" Bream roaming about center field. The other post will be hard fought for as many hopefuls are trying for outfield posts.

The schedule for the coming season will be one of the hardest undertaken. Several dates are still open but every one is expected to be filled before the season opens. The first game will be played April 3 with Middletown High on the Playground.

Tree Surgeons Will Try To Save Ancient Elm Tree

Lock Haven.—Attempts are being made by tree surgeons to save an ancient elm tree near the mouth of Pine Creek, under which pioneer settlers signed a declaration of independence July 4, 1776. The tree is estimated to be several hundred years old. Members of the Daughters of the American Revolution are credited with the efforts of trying to preserve it.

The Pine creek declaration was signed on the same day that the Congress in Philadelphia signed the Declaration of Independence for all the colonies. It was not until many days later that the Pine creek settlers knew of Congress' action in separating from the mother country.

The colonists held their meeting on a plain a short distance from the creek. There was much discussion and many speeches after which they prepared and signed a resolution severing their allegiance to England and declaring themselves free and independent. This declaration never was found and it is believed that it was sent to England.

Ralph C. Robinson Speaks At Service

Friday evening Ralph C. Robinson delivered the discourse in the fifth of the seminary Lenten public preaching services before a good sized audience in the seminary chapel.

The speaker used the theme: "The Eternal Christ" from the text "Before Abraham was, I am." "The Christian church is eternal and nothing can stop its progress because the founder of it is eternal," said Mr. Robinson. "Life itself should be compared with the eternal and abiding values as the standard. Only in proportion as we do measure it with the lasting merits do we build in ourselves the preparation for a lasting life. Why spend the days allotted in doing temporary things when the life itself is endless," he added. The Seminary Quartet sang a special number.

Next Friday evening T. Benton Peery will be the speaker at the concluding service.

BERLENBACH IS BADLY BEATEN

Light Heavyweight Champ Floored by Cleveland Who Scores Sensational Victory.

New York, Mar. 20.—Paul Berlenbach's quest for recognition as a heavyweight contender was abruptly checked Friday night when he was decisively whipped in a slashing ten round battle with Johnny Risko, of Cleveland, in the feature match at Madison Square Garden. The referee's decision was almost unnecessary to determine the result.

The world's light heavyweight king not only was battered from start to finish by his 22-year-old opponent, a comparatively newcomer to fistic ranks, but was close to a knockout in each of the first three rounds of one of the most sensational ring upsets of the season.

Berlenbach was floored for a count of four in the first round by a crashing left to the jaw, saved only by the bell as he careened to the canvas again in the second round under the impact of another pile driving left and groggy under a hall of punches in the third.

Surviving this unexpected and terrific storm, however, seemed to have a stimulating effect on Berlenbach, for he rallied and nearly held his own for the rest of the fight, staving off Risko's rushes and finishing with a spirited rally in the tenth round.

Berlenbach's gameness and stamina, however, were unequal to offsetting the superior power in Risko's punches and the tremendous weight advantage enjoyed by the Cleveland, who tipped 190 to the champion's 174½. Both tired under their terrific pace, but Risko was the stronger at the finish.

A crowd of 16,000 fans, whipped to a frenzied pitch of excitement, saw Risko pound his way to a sensational victory which stamped him as an outstanding heavyweight contender while it virtually blasted the hopes Berlenbach entertained of entering the heavier division. The young Cleveland displayed a granite jaw which absorbed Berlenbach's heaviest blows without damaging effect, as well as a terrific punch in either hand.

Birmingham, Ala., March 20.—At least 16 men were killed and 17 others injured in an explosion that wrecked furnace No. 2 of the Woodward Iron Company near here today. The full extent of the casualties was not known until additional bodies were removed from the debris.

In addition to the 16 identified dead, two negro workers are missing. It is feared they were buried in the debris.

STOCK REPORT

New York, March 20.—Another sharp drive against motor shares featured today's irregular market. Prices showed a tendency to advance on short coverings in the early trading, but when business quieted down selling pressure was renewed against motors and some of the high priced industrial specialties. Strong support was provided for U. S. Steel common, Baldwin, and most of the oil and rail shares. The closing was irregular.

HIGH STARTS B. B. PRACTICE

Several Regulars Respond to Call; Captain "Jake" Weikert Hopes For Successful Season.

(By Don Bee)

Issuing forth to Coach Reynolds, call for baseball candidates approximately thirty-five aspirants for team positions appeared on the Playground field for the first workout of the season Friday night. Among the letter men who reported was "Jake" Weikert, who will do the receiving for the Maroon and White nine as well as pilot the machine. Jim Tennant and "Eddie" Utz, pitchers; Johns Myers, third base; Dale Bream, left field, and Wilmer Bream, center field, were the other men who reported for the first drill.

Many other players were on hand and there promises to be merry battles for the various positions this year. The biggest question will be the infield. With but one man back who plays the hot corner there remains three open berths. "Bud" Knox, sensational player for the Bullets last summer, is expected to fill one of these gaps with the other two very much in doubt. The pitching and catching for this year's nine will be of the best. Tennant and Utz, who pitched the undefeated nine of last years to victory, will comprise the backbone of the staff. Gibbs, of no-hit, no-run fame for York Springs, will make a strong bid for a position on the hurling corps.

Captain Jake Weikert is expected to fill the backstop position in his same skill, with Bill Jones as his understudy.

The outfield will remain intact, but for a right fielder. Dale Bream will be in left field again with "Screetchie" Bream roaming about center field. The other post will be hard fought for as many hopefuls are trying for outfield posts.

The schedule for the coming season will be one of the hardest undertaken. Several dates are still open but every one is expected to be filled before the season opens. The first game will be played April 3 with Middletown High on the Playground.

Tree Surgeons Will Try To Save Ancient Elm Tree

Lock Haven.—Attempts are being made by tree surgeons to save an ancient elm tree near the mouth of Pine Creek, under which pioneer settlers signed a declaration of independence July 4, 1776. The tree is estimated to be several hundred years old. Members of the Daughters of the American Revolution are credited with the efforts of trying to preserve it.

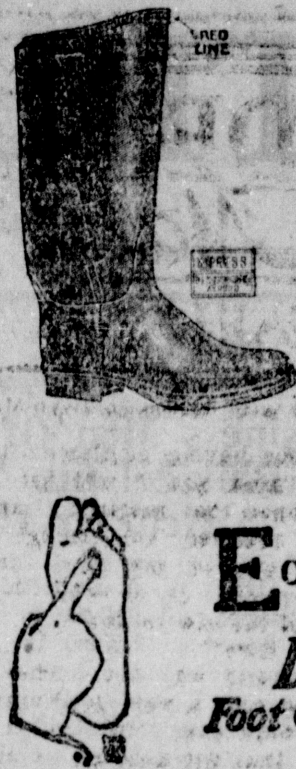

The Pine creek declaration was signed on the same day that the Congress in Philadelphia signed the Declaration of Independence for all the colonies. It was not until many days later that the Pine creek settlers knew of Congress' action in separating from the mother country.

The colonists held their meeting on a plain a short distance from the creek. There was much discussion and many speeches after which they prepared and signed a resolution severing their allegiance to England and declaring themselves free and independent. This declaration never was found and it is believed that it was sent to England.

"Chatterault? No, no." He shook his head whimsically. "Chatterault has had his laugh already, and, like the ill-mannered dog he is, he has kept it to himself. I think, Marcel, that it is our turn now. I have purposely sent Chatterault away that he may gain no notion of the catastrophic jest we are preparing him in return."

The words set me in the very heart of humors, and to that it may be due that presently, as I warmed to my narrative, I lent it a vigour that drew His Majesty out of his wonted apathy and listlessness. He leaned forward when I told him of my encounter with the dragons at Mirepoix, and how first I committed the false step of representing myself to be Lesperon.

Encouraged by his interest, I proceeded, and I told my story with as much piquancy as I was master of, repressing only those slight matters which might reflect upon Monsieur de Lavedan's loyalty, but otherwise dealing frankly with His Majesty, even down to the genuineness of the feelings I entertained for Roxalanne. Often he laughed, more often still he nodded approvingly. In understanding and sympathy, whilst now and then he purred his applause. But towards the end, when I came to the matter of the Tribunal of Toulouse, of how my trial was conducted, and of the part played in it by Chatterault, his face grew set and hard.

"It is true—all this that you tell me?" he cried harshly.

"As true as the Gospels. If you fancy for having gentlemen about me. Think you I will set eyes again upon that dastard? I am already resolved concerning him, but it entered my mind that it might please you to be the instrument of the law for me."

"Me, sire?"

"Aye, and why not? They say you can play a very deadly sword upon necessity. This is an occasion that demands an exception from our edict. You have my sanction to send the Comte de Chatterault a challenge. And see that you kill him, Bardelys!" he continued viciously. "For, by the Mass, if you don't, I will! If he escapes your sword, or if he survives such hurt as you may do him, the headsman shall have his Mordieu! Is it for nothing that I am called Louis the Just?"

I stood in doubt for a moment. Then—

"If I do this thing, sire," I ventured, "the world will say of me that I did so to escape the payment I had incurred."

"Fool, you have not incurred it. When a man cheats, does he not forfeit all his rights?"

"That is very true. But the world—"

"Peste!" he snapped impatiently, "you are beginning to weary me, Marcel—and all the world does that so excellently that it needs not your collaboration. Go your ways, man, and do as you elect. But take my sanction to slap this fellow Chatterault, and I shall be the better pleased if you avail yourself of it. He is lodged at the Auberge Royale, where probably you will find him at present. Now go. I have more justice to dispense in this rebellious province."

"If he escapes your sword—the headsman shall take him."

deem an oath necessary. Sire, I swear by my honour that I have uttered nothing that is false, and that, in connection with Monsieur de Chatterault, even as I have suppressed nothing, so also have I exaggerated nothing."

"The dastard!" he snapped. "But we will avenge you, Marcel. Never fear it."

Then the trend of his thoughts being changed, he smiled wearily. "By my faith, you may thank God every night of your worthless life that I came so opportunely to Toulouse, and so may that fair child whose beauty you have limned with such a lover's ardour. Nay, never redden, Marcel. What? At your age, and with such a heavy score of affairs to your credit, has it been left for a simple Languedoc maiden to call a blush to your callous cheek? Ma foi, they say truly that love is a great regenerator, a great rejuvenator!"

I made him no answer other than a sigh, for his words set me thinking, and with thought came a tempering of the gay humour that had pervaded me. Remarking this, and misreading it, he laughed outright.

"There, Marcel, never fear. We will not be rigorous. You have won both the maid and the wager, and, by the Mass, you shall enjoy both."

"Hélas, sire," I sighed again, "when the lady comes to know of the wager—"

"Waste no time telling her, Marcel, and cast yourself upon her mercy. Nay go not with so gloomy a face, my friend. When woman loves, she can be very merciful—leastways, they tell me so."

Then, his thoughts shifting ground once more, he grew stern again.

"But first we have Chatterault to deal with. What shall we do with him?"

"It is for Your Majesty to decide."

"For me?" he cried, his voice resuming the harshness that was never far from it. "I have a

I paused a moment. "Shall I not resume my duties near Your Majesty?"

He pondered a moment, then he smiled in his weary way.

"It would please me to have you, for these creatures are so disgustingly dull, all of them. Je m'ennuie tellement, Marcel!" he sighed.

"Ough! But, no, my friend, I do not doubt you would be as dull as any of them at present. A man in love is the weariest and most futile thing in all this weary, futile world. What shall I do with your body what time your soul is at Lavedan? I doubt me you are in haste to get you there. So go, Marcel. Get you wed, and live out your amorous intoxication; marriage is the best antidote. When that is done, return to me."

"That will be never, sire," I answered slyly.

"Say you so, Master Cupid Bardelys?" And he combed his beard reflectively. "Be not too sure. There have been other passions—aye, as great as yours—yet have they staled. But you waste my time. Go, Marcel; you are excused your duties by me as long as you please. We are here upon a gloomy business—as you know. There are my cousin Montmorency and the others to be dealt with, and we are holding no levees, countenancing no revels. But come to me when you will, and I will see you. Adieu!"

I murmured my thanks, and very deep and sincere were they. Then, having kissed his hand, I left him.

CHAPTER XIV

Eavesdropping

I turned it over in my mind, after I had left the King's presence, whether or not I should visit with my own hands upon Chatterault the punishment he had so fully earned. That I would have gone about the task rejoicing you may readily imagine; but there was that accursed wager, and—to restrain me—the thought of how such an action might be construed into the evasion of its consequences. Better a thousand times that His Majesty should order his arrest and deal with him for his attempted perversion of justice to the service of his own vile ends. The charge of having abused his trust as King's commissioner to the extent of seeking to do murder through the channels of the Tribunal was one that could not fail to have fatal results for him—as, indeed, the King had sworn.

That was the position of affairs as it concerned Chatterault, the world and me. But the position must also be considered as it concerned Roxalanne, and deeply did I so consider it. Much pondering brought me again to the conclusion that until I had made the only atonement in my power, the only atonement that would leave me with clean hands, I must not again approach her.

Whether Chatterault had cheated or not could not affect the question as it concerned Mademoiselle and me. If I paid the wager—whether in honour bound to do so or not—I might then go to her, impoverished, it is true, but at least with no suspicion attaching to my suit of any ulterior object other than that of winning Roxalanne herself.

I could then make confession, and surely the fact that I had paid where clearly there was no longer any need to pay must earn me forgiveness and afford proof of the sincerity of my passion.

Upon such a course, then, did I decide, and, with this end in view, I took my way towards the Auberge Royale, where His Majesty had told me that the Count was lodged. It was my purpose to show myself fully aware of the treacherous and unworthy part he had played at the very inception of the affair, and that if I chose to consider the wager lost it was that I might the more honestly win the lady.

Upon inquiring at the hostelry for Monsieur de Chatterault, I was informed by the servant I addressed that he was within, but that at the moment he had a visitor. I replied that I would wait, and demanded a private room, since I desired to avoid meeting any Court acquaintances who might chance into the auberge before I had seen the Count.

My apparel at the moment may not have been all that could have been desired, but when a gentleman's rearing has taken place amid an army of servants to minister to his every wish, he is likely to have acquired an air that is wont to win him obedience. With all celerity I was ushered into a small chamber, opening on the one side upon the common room, and being divided on the other by the thinnest of wooden partitions from the adjoining apartment.

Here, the landlord having left me, I disposed myself to wait, and here I did a thing I would not have believed myself capable of doing, a thing I cannot think of without blushing to this very day. In short, I played the eavesdropper—I, Marcel Saint-Pol de Bardelys. Yet, if you who read and are nice minded, shudder at this confession, or worse still, shrug your shoulders in contempt, with the reflection that such former conduct of mine as I have avowed had already partly disposed you against surprise at this—I do but ask that you measure my sin by my temptation, and think honestly whether in my position you might not yourselves have fallen. Aye—be you never so noble and high-principled—I make bold to say you had done no less, for the voice that penetrated to my ears was that of Roxalanne de Lavedan.

"I sought an audience with the King," she was saying, "but I could not gain his presence. They told me that he was holding no levees, and that he refused to see any one not introduced by one of those having the private entree."

"And so," answered the voice of Chatterault, in tones that were perfectly colourless, "you come to me that I may present you to His Majesty?"

"You have guessed it, Monsieur le Comte. You are the only gentleman of His Majesty's suite, with whom I can claim acquaintance—however slight—and, moreover, it is well known how high you stand in his royal favour. I was told that they that have a boon to crave can find no better sponsor."

"Had you gone to the King, mademoiselle," said he, "had you gained an audience, he would have directed you to make your appeal to me. I am his Commissioner in Languedoc, and the prisoners attainted with high treason are my property."

"Why then, monsieur," she cried in an eager voice, that set my pulses throbbing, "you'll not deny me the boon I crave? You'll not deny me his life?"

There was a short laugh from Chatterault, and I could hear the deliberate fall of his feet as he paced the chamber.

"Chatterault? No, no." He shook his head whimsically. "Chatterault has had his laugh already, and, like the ill-mannered dog he is, he has kept it to himself. I think, Marcel, that it is our turn now. I have purposely sent Chatterault away that he may gain no notion of the catastrophe that we are preparing him in return."

The words set me in the very best of humors, and to that it may be due that presently, as I warmed to my narrative, I lent it a vigour that drew His Majesty out of his wonted apathy and listlessness. He leaned forward when I told him of my encounter with the dragons at Mirepoix, and how first I committed the false step of representing myself to be Lesperon.

Encouraged by his interest, I proceeded, and I told my story with as much piquancy as I was master of, repressing only those slight matters which might reflect upon Monsieur de Lavedan's loyalty, but otherwise dealing frankly with His Majesty, even down to the genuineness of the feelings I entertained for Roxalanne. Often he laughed, more often still he nodded approvingly, in understanding and sympathy, whilst now and then he purred his applause. But towards the end, when I came to the matter of the Tribunal of Toulouse, of how my trial was conducted, and of the part played in it by Chatterault, his face grew set and hard.

"It is true—all this that you tell me," he cried harshly.

"As true as the Gospels. If you fancy for having gentlemen about me. Think you I will set eyes again upon that dastard? I am already resolved concerning him, but it entered my mind that it might please you to be the instrument of the law for me."

"Me, sire?"

"Aye, and why not? They say you can play a very deadly sword upon necessity. This is an occasion that demands an exception from our edict. You have my sanction to send the Comte de Chatterault a challenge. And see that you kill him, Bardelys!" he continued viciously. "For, by the Mass, if you don't, I will! If he escapes your sword, or if he survives such hurt as you may do him, the headsman shall have him. Mordieu! it is for nothing that I am called Louis the Just!"

I stood in thought for a moment.

"If I do this thing, sire," I ventured, "the world will say of me that I did so to escape the payment I had incurred."

"Fool, you have not incurred it. When a man cheats, does he not forfeit all his rights?"

"That is very true. But the world—"

"Peste!" he snapped impatiently, "you are beginning to weary me, Marcel—and all the world does that so excellently that it needs not your collaboration. Go your ways, man, and do as you elect. But take my sanction to slap this fellow Chatterault, and I shall be the better pleased if you avail yourself of it. He is lodged at the Auberge Royale, where probably you will find him at present. Now go. I have more justice to dispense in this rebellious province."

"Upon inquiring at the hostelry for Monsieur de Chatterault, I was informed by the servant I addressed that he was within, but that at the moment he had a visitor. I replied that I would wait, and demanded a private room, since I desired to avoid meeting any Court acquaintances who might chance into the auberge before I had seen the Count."

My apparel at the moment may not have been all that could have been desired, but when a gentleman's bearing has taken place amid an army of servants to minister to his every wish, he is likely to have acquired an air that is wont to win him obedience. With all celerity I was ushered into a small chamber, opening on the one side upon the common room, and being divided on the other by the thinnest of wooden partitions from the adjoining apartment.

Here, the landlord having left me, I disposed myself to wait, and here I did a thing I would not have believed myself capable of doing, a thing I cannot think of without blushing to this very day. In short, I played the eavesdropper—yet, I, Marcel Saint-Pol de Bardelys. Yet, if you who read are nice-minded, shudder at this confession, or, worse still, shrug your shoulders in contempt, with the reflection that such former conduct of mine as I have avowed had already partly disposed you against surprise at this—I do but ask that you measure my sin by my temptation, and think honestly whether in my position you might not yourselves have fallen. Aye—be you never so noble and high-principled—I make bold to say you had done no less, for the voice that penetrated to my ears was that of Roxalanne de Lavedan.

"I sought an audience with the King," she was saying. "But I could not gain his presence. They told me that he was holding no levees, and that he refused to see any one not introduced by one of those having the private entree."

"And so," answered the voice of Chatterault, in tones that were perfectly colourless, "you come to me that I may present you to His Majesty?"

"You have guessed it, Monsieur le Comte. You are the only gentleman of His Majesty's suite, with whom I can claim acquaintance—however slight—and, moreover, it is well known how high you stand in his royal favour. I was told that they that have a boon to crave can find no better sponsor."

"Had you gone to the King, mademoiselle," said he, "had you gained an audience, he would have directed you to make your appeal to me. I am his Commissioner in Languedoc, and the prisoners attainted with high treason are my property."

"Why then, monsieur," she cried in an eager voice, that set my pulses throbbing, "you'll not deny me the boon I crave? You'll not deny me his life?"

There was a short laugh from Chatterault, and I could hear the deliberate fall of his feet as he paced the chamber.

into the evasion of its consequences. Better a thousand times that His Majesty should order his arrest and deal with him for his attempted perversion of justice to the service of his own vile ends. The charge of having abused his trust as King's commissioner to the extent of seeking to do murder through the channels of the Tribunal was one that could not fall to have fatal results for him—as, indeed, the King had sworn. That was the position of affairs as it concerned Chatterault, the world and me. But the position must also be considered as it concerned Roxalanne, and deeply, did I so consider it. Much pondering brought me again to the conclusion that until I had made the only atonement in my power, the only atonement that would leave me with clean hands, I must not again approach her.

Whether Chatterault had cheated or not could not affect the question as it concerned Mademoiselle and me. If I paid the wager—whether in honour bound to do so or not—I might then go to her, impoverished, it is true, but at least with no suspicion attaching to my suit of any ulterior object other than that of winning Roxalanne herself.

I could then make confession, and surely the fact that I had paid where clearly there was no longer any need to pay must earn me forgiveness and afford proof of the sincerity of my passion.

Upon such a course, then, did I decide, and, with this end in view, I took my way towards the Auberge Royale, where his Majesty had told me that the Count was lodged. It was my purpose to show myself fully aware of the treacherous and unworthy part he had played at the very inception of the affair, and that if I chose to consider the wager lost it was that I might the more honestly win the lady.

Upon inquiring at the hostelry for Monsieur de Chatterault, I was informed by the servant I addressed that he was within, but that at the moment he had a visitor. I replied that I would wait, and demanded a private room, since I desired to avoid meeting any Court acquaintances who might chance into the auberge before I had seen the Count."

St. Mary's basketball team of McSherrystown closed its season Thursday night by defeating the fast team representing the Third Army Corps from the Carlisle barracks. The score was 42 to 27. The game was one of the roughest contests played on the St. Mary's floor this season and was witnessed by a fair sized crowd. McSherrystown held the lead throughout the game, and at half time the score was 24 to 15. The leading features of the game were Devine's effective passing, Smith's spectacular shooting of goals and the guarding exhibition by Lawrence. Balsary starred for the visitors. The score:

Ovid "Love Books"
Finally Delivered

Baltimore, March 20.—Official Washington has cut the red tape which has held the "Love Books of Ovid" in the recesses of the post office and directed that the volume be delivered to Dr. Kemp Malone, associate in English at Johns Hopkins University.

Delivery of the book was held up two weeks ago when the local postal authorities decided it violated the postal code, which forbids sending obscene matter through the mails. Dr. Malone received the book Friday in the regular mail delivery.

When notified two weeks ago by the local postal authorities that the "Love Books of Ovid" were of too obscene nature to be passed through United States mails, Dr. Malone wrote a strong protest to Washington.

He pointed out that he had ordered the book for classical use and research work and referred to the fact that for centuries the writings of Ovid had been highly prized by all scholars for their beauty and unmatched excellence.

SPRING
Snow lingers in the deep woods. Floating ice flecks the swollen streams. But the blue jay screams in the thicket, the sap flows in the maples, the buds of the willow are swelling, and each shower spreads a new coat of tender green over the brown fields. Winter still lingers in her lap, but Spring, says Liberty magazine, impatient, is shaking the creases from her skirt and preparing to trim her Easter hat with blossoms. The line of demarcation no longer is as clearly defined as it was in the days of our fathers. The world no longer hibernates. The time has passed when Americans sealed themselves in their houses and in their red flannels and marked the passing of the seasons by taking a bath.

Automobiles, golf, Florida, winter sports, California, closed cars, exercise, fast freights bringing fresh fruits and vegetables, common sense, open plumbing, and modern heating have taken terror from winter. The coming of spring, while no less welcome, is less noticeable.

A generation or two ago American people killed the hogs, stored fruits and vegetables in pits or in cellars, strung dried apples and peaches, filled pantry shelves with jams and jellies, hung the rafters with salted meats, filled barrels with cider, kraut, and pickled meats, piled fodder around the foundations of their homes, battened windows and doors, heaped cordwood near the kitchen, and settled down behind barricades to gorge and sleep, braving the outdoors only at feeding and milking time or occasionally to hunt for fresh meat.

When sap stirred in the maples red flannels were removed; the treacle bowl was filled with sulphur and molasses; dandelion, mustard sprout, and shepherd's-purse leaves were cut for greens; quarts of "spring tonic" and boxes of blue-mass pills were swallowed; the manure piles were reduced from mountains and spread upon the land, and spring was officially proclaimed.

Now the average citizen changes from medium-weight balbriggans to athletic union suits, grabs golf clubs or buys new ties, and dates spring from his first drive off the tee or into the country rather than from the calendar.

Spring is in the air, in your blood, manifesting itself in a thousand ways. Men whistle as they walk—their step is springier. The man next door tinkers with his fivver and hums as he dreams of roads winding through green fields. The cat, deserting the

WHAT THEY'RE COMING TO
I do not fret o'er knee length skirts or rings within the ears
Which much resemble as they swing those old-time chandeliers;
I see the pretty modern girls who shock our ancient crew
But I have not the slightest doubt of what they're coming to.

They're on their way, as long ago were those good wives of ours,
To pots and pans and kitchen stoves and food a man devours;
To making beds and dusting chairs, to bassinets and cribs
And tucking under little chins those hand-embroidered bibs.

These modern styles, which age deplores, will little change their lives,
They're on their way to men like us to be their faithful wives;
They're on their way to humdrum tasks, to nights of anxious care
And to the endless duties borne by women everywhere.

These frivolous and pretty things with baubles in their cars
Will rule the houses of the land in just a few more years;
They're on their way to every hurt and joy that we've been through;
And there is not the slightest doubt of what they're coming to.

fireside, prowls the back fence. Sparrows chatter as they tear straws from last year's nest and make plans for the new home. The hand-organ man grinds out tunes as children dance around him.

Commuters bear homeward bundles of bulbs and roots. Conversation in smoking-cars ranges from creeping beet for putting greens to the best varieties of green corn. Young men moon over their work, visions of rose-decked cottages in their eyes. The stenographer hides a love poem when the boss walks by.

Seed catalogues, automobile, summer cottage, and camping outfit advertisements furnish evening reading for father. Mother, busy with Easter outfits for herself and the girls, talks excitedly of visiting grandmother on the farm when the frost is out of the ground. Uncle Jim takes a few practice swings with golf clubs in the hall, finds his fishing outfit, whistles as he oils the ferules and, with a flip of the wrist, casts an imaginary fly at a trout lurking under the edge of the living-room rug.

Spring is here—not the spring of accumulated fat, bile, and ills of winter gorging, of tonic, treacle, rheumatism, and calomel, but the spring of outdoors: golf, motoring, and healthy glow from exercise and good digestion.

How to Buy Roofing

Lyonore Metal used on corn shed owned by Mr. Allen Eppley near Littlestown, Pa.

WEATHER TIGHT

No. 2 of a series which tells the important points to watch in buying a roof.

THE duty of a roof is to protect your property—the building it covers and the contents within. On your house, it must safeguard the health of your family.

A ROOF of galvanized Lyonore Metal is weather tight. Because of its narrower width it is laid in 20" courses providing closer anchorage. Though tough, it is more pliable than ordinary roofing, which makes a tighter joint possible.

A properly laid roof of Lyonore Metal is perfect protection against rain, snow, hail and windstorm. There are no crevices that moisture can possibly seep through. It is lightning proof.

Be sure you get Lyonore Metal—the rust-resisting alloy. Look for this trade mark.

How to Buy Roofing

WEATHER TIGHT

No. 2 of a series which tells the important points to watch in buying a roof.

THE duty of a roof is to protect your property—the building it covers and the contents within. On your house, it must safeguard the health of your family.

A ROOF of galvanized Lyonore Metal is weather tight. Because of its narrower width it is laid in 20" courses providing closer anchorage. Though tough, it is more pliable than ordinary roofing, which makes a tighter joint possible.

A properly laid roof of Lyonore Metal is perfect protection against rain, snow, hail and windstorm. There are no crevices that moisture can possibly seep through. It is lightning proof.

Be sure you get Lyonore Metal—the rust-resisting alloy. Look for this trade mark.

Try the EASY at our expense

HERE'S a wonderful opportunity to buy a washing machine such as you have always wanted—the world-famous Easy. We will send an Easy and a demonstrator to your home and do a week's washing for you. It won't cost you a cent or obligate you at all.

We want to show you how much time, labor and trouble the Easy will save you. And we want you to know how the Easy's vacuum cup system of washing gets all the dirt out of all the clothes, yet handles the fine, dainty pieces as gently as your own hands.

If you want to keep the Easy you can leave a small deposit and arrange to pay for the machine as you use it, a little at a time. In this way no family feels it a burden to buy the Easy.

Clarion.—Air mail officials are taking steps to apprehend persons, presumably boys and hunters, who have been using the revolving lights at some of the landing fields between here and Bellefonte for targets. Bulbs in the lights have also been taken from the sockets, it is said. These depredations, it is pointed out, may cause serious accidents to planes and pilots, as the beacons mark the air route as well as landing fields.

Radical Books Decline in West With Passing of Knights of Road

San Francisco.—Vagabondage in the West and the demand for radical literature are decreasing, reports from various sources indicate.

That the two bear relationship to each other seems to be proclaimed by records of police stations and larger book dealers of Seattle, Los Angeles, Portland and San Francisco. From these it is manifest that as the ranks of migratory travellers are thinned the market for "red reading" falls off in ratio.

Librarians note a similar fading in the popularity of radical books. They attribute it to general prosperity, reaction from the war and dwindling interest in pre-war unconventional political theories.

In the case of one San Francisco book dealer the decrease in the demand for extremist literature has been so marked that he has relegated it to the back rooms. Its place on the show shelves has been taken by works on radio, occultism, psychoanalysis, evolution and other scientific themes.

Because it is sparsely settled in comparison with the East, the West has long been a popular field for the migratory and casual worker and the one belonging to the class known as "hoboes."

In the larger cities the casuals or "hoboes" are to be found in "flop" houses and around small employment agencies. The type known as "pan-handlers" work "the stems" or principal streets appealing to the more generous appearing citizens for the price of a meal or bed. Out West this type lives in what is known as "jungles." These are small camps near larger towns and cities where a fire is kept going and wanderers of the pedestrian type may find a bit to eat or contribute one, if he has something.

But the "jungles" is passing. It is estimated by police authorities that the West's migratory pedestrian population has diminished 30 per cent or more since the starting of the World War. Changed conditions have enabled many to obtain jobs and then "pickings" have become poorer because of the general organization of "community chests" so that there is not the incentive to invade western fields once regarded more or less as the "panhandler's paradise."

The old time hobo, it has been found also, has raised himself into the class of the auto tourist—second hand cars of a popular make being within the grasp of the man willing to work even a few weeks of the year—and as a result the tramp finds the auto camp more comfortable than the "jungles."

California police who have been called on to contend with the annual winter months' invasion of those of invisible means say that another avenue of occupation has opened for the man of tramp type, which also contributes to the "jungles" decreasing population. It is bootlegging, which appeals to some of the younger and more virile type.
